I really tried to like this game. The visuals and music are really cool and it's a very unique idea, and I love rhythm games. I was very excited to pick it up on sale for $3.

It just feels really awkward to move your ship around and have it exactly on the line. It seems almost impossible to have it right on track. I played the game for a good hour and I still had no idea what was going wrong with my shooting. It seems like you actually have to shoot a little off the beat? And you can't shoot even a little too late? I don't know if I'm a baby when it comes to games with high difficulty, but there should be at least a little room for error to make the experience enjoyable and not frustrating.

Along with a few things that erk me like very few graphics options (that don't seem to do much) and a very confusing tutorial, it was just not something I could keep playing.

It seems like a lot of people do enjoy the game, so you could try it out. I could be completely wrong and just have an unpopular opinion, but it really didn't feel like a rhythm game to me. More of a bullet hell shooter synced to music which was not what I was expecting.
